EXECUTIVE FUNCTIONING – HOW TO HELP STUDENTS DO WHAT YOU KNOW THEY CAN DO

Joanna Johns

Executive functioning refers how you do what you decide to do. It includes the ability to manage time and attention, to be a flexible thinker, to plan and organize, to remember details, to resist impulses and other skills students need to have in order to be a successful student. Learn what Executive Functioning is, why many students have difficulties with it, and easy ways to both accommodate and intervene to support all students in your classroom. Focus will be on students in middle school and high school (the age where we tend to expect students to have these skills already).
